COMMERCIAL FILMING SPECIAL USE PERMITS

FAQS

What is Commercial Filming?

Commercial filming is the use of motion picture, videotaping, sound-recording, or any other type of moving image or audio recording equipment on National Forest lands that involves the advertisement of a product or service or the use of actors, models, sets, or props.

The Deschutes and Ochoco National Forests as well as the Crooked River National Grassland offer diverse landscapes and activities that have been captured through a variety of mediums for print ads, commercials, and full length films. The Forests and Grasslands promote continued efforts to highlight these landscapes and activities by assisting commercial filming enterprises.

When is a Special Use Permit Required?

A Special Use permit is required for any commercial filming, both still and motion pictures, if any of the following criterion apply:

- The filming includes the use of actors or models
- The filming includes the use of sets or props (such as commercial products)
- The filming is proposed in a location that is not open to the general public

Permits are not required for coverage of breaking news stories or the filming of scenery with no actors, models, sets, or props.

How do I get a Special Use Permit for Commercial Filming?

The application process begins with contacting the appropriate District Special Use Permit Administrator and submitting the application. Please fill-out the application as completely as possible since the Special Use permit will authorize only what is included on the application.

The best way to ensure you receive a permit is to start as early as possible and contact the District Special Use Permit Administrator for the area you are wanting to film. The District Special Use Permit Administrator will provide the required form for receiving a Special Use permit. Timelines for responses vary by office and filming site(s).

Why Might an Application Denied?

A commercial filming application could create an unreasonable impact on public use of an area and be denied. Filming could cause unacceptable damage to natural resources or pose a health or safety hazard to the film crew, the public, or wildlife. In addition, special management areas on the Forest and Grassland restrict or limit filming opportunities. For example, commercial filming is not allowed in Federally designated Wilderness areas unless the activity's objective is to disseminate information about wilderness, is wilderness-dependent and an appropriate non-wilderness substitute does not exist, and the activity would not involve the use of any motorized equipment or mechanical transport. The Forests encourage applicants to contact the District Special Use Permit Administrator early on in the process to ensure a timely application review.

What are the Fees?

When your proposal has been accepted, the U.S. Forest Service will identify the fees necessary to issue the permit. Processing fees and land use fees must be paid prior to the issuance of a permit. Fees for commercial filming are based on a regional schedule, determined by the number of days of filming, and the number of people.

Checklist for Commercial Filming Permit

It is important to contact the District Special Use Permit Administrators as early as possible to ensure a timely application review. The checklist below can help your company compile permit information early on in the process.

- Submit a Photography Film and Request application at least 30 days prior to a desired production date. A shorter timeline request will be done on a case by case basis. The form includes company contact information as well as project date, time, and description.
- Describe the needs and type of location desired for filming. This description should include a map of the area, storyboards, photos, and proposed ground disturbing activities.
- Develop a time schedule that includes dates and locations of operations.
- List all vehicles, equipment, props, chemicals, or other materials that will be used or transported.
- Calculate the number of people that will be involved for set up, filming, breakdown, and restoration.
- Provide a Certificate of Insurance. Instructions are in the Photography Film and Request application.
